POST-PANDEMIC PRODUCTION RELOCATION: AN OPPORTUNITY FOR CEE COUNTRIES?

Here are the main points addressed in this Coface study:

A favourable context

Foreign trade and inclusion in supply chains had already increased for Central & Eastern Europe (CEE) in recent years, boosted by most of its countries' decision to join the European Union (EU) in 2004.

Strong assets

- An educated workforce
- Geographical proximity to Western Europe
- Low labour costs
- Relatively good infrastructure
- A stable business climate
- Improving productivity through greater use of automation and "robotization".

Various sectors concerned

- The automotive industry, the industrial backbone of the region
- But also: the production of machinery, chemicals, and electrical & electronic equipment, as well as the transport and storage sectors
- And new opportunities: outsourcing of services through digitalization and a large ICT talent pool

However, investments are necessary

New investments are needed for the region to gain a favourable position, especially in terms of automation and digitalization.

Grzegorz Sielewicz, Coface's Central & Eastern Europe economist and author of this study, is available for further information.
